

Persisk 1110 Høst 2018 Sensorveiledninger

The final exam for Persian 1110 will be held on Friday, 30 November 2018 at 9:00 am in Lesesal C and D Sophus Bugges hus . The exam will be on paper. No computers, electronic devices, dictionaries, or any other outside materials will be permitted during the exam.

The exam covers all of the materials in the introduction and the first four lessons of the textbook (Anousha Sedighi, Persian in Use: An Elementary Textbook of Language and Culture, Leiden University Press, 2015, 1-168). Students are expected to be able to write in proper Persian on simple subjects related to themselves and their immediate surroundings. In addition to reading, comprehending, and producing basic structures in Persian, students are expected to be able to translate between Persian and English and to analyze Persian sentences using English grammatical terminology.

The exam will include a section that requires students to write an essay or correspondence of at least 150 words. A successful essay will demonstrate mastery of the grammatical, lexical, and thematic topics covered in Persian 1110. For this section, students will be given an essay prompt with directions on what kind of text and on what topic to write.

The exam will constitute 100 points in total. A student must earn 70 points or higher to receive a passing grade. The essay will be worth 20 points. The remaining 80 points will come from questions related to the following material and/or grammatical points:

- the Persian alphabet and sounds
- cardinal and ordinal numbers
- all vocabulary in lessons 1-4. Vocabulary lists cover topics including, but not limited to, nationalities, professions, greetings, countries, family, fields of study, class objects, calculations, means of transportation, days of the week, eating, languages, times of the day, location, common courtesies, colors, body parts, housing, animals, time
- the ezafeh connector
- specific, non-specific, and generic nouns
- the specific direct object marker
- the indefinite marker
- verbs in the simple present tense and infinitive forms
- Personal, demonstrative, and possessive pronouns
- demonstrative adjectives
- suffix pronouns
- prepositions
- differences between written (کتابی) and spoken (گفتاری) Persian
