Note for all questions:
Use empirical examples from at least 3 works on the reading list to discuss the question. Draw from readings across the syllabus while showing your own reflections, observations, and arguments. Show attention to details, context, and nuance. You may use additional scholarly sources, media, internet research, and personal experiences, but you must also engage with the required readings, connecting them to the question and each other. Please make sure to add a list of references (a bibliography) at the end.

Exam questions:
Answer one (1) of the following four questions:

1. Examine the notions of "Southeast Asia" and "East Asia" and discuss the connections or differences within or between these regions from one or more of the following perspectives: family and kinship; ethnicity and nationalism; migration; environmental conservation; religion and spirituality; rural and urban life; economic development; "regional ethnography" and social anthropology.

2. How do gender and/or kinship relations influence labour practices, people's livelihoods, and broader economics? Provide two examples from East and/or Southeast Asia.

3. With examples from East Asia and/or Southeast Asia, discuss why we should pay attention to gods, spirits, cosmic forces, and people's spiritual, philosophical, or religious identities?

4. Globalisation and urbanisation benefit local people. Critically examine this statement.

Best of luck!
