Is it something that works especially well in the lectures?

Bygrave is an engaging lecturer, and the lecture handouts are great and make it easier to follow the lectures.
I like how relevant the course is, and that Bygrave uses real cases and examples in his lectures. I like how Bygrave includes the students, and encourages us to ask questions and contribute.
Question and discussion in lectures works well.
the lecturer explain well
the lecturer explain well
The lecturer is great at giving relevant and interesting examples the teacher is really good, accessible and with a good knowledge of the content

Do you have any advice on what could be improved in the lectures?

If there are digital lectures next time this module is taught, digital guest lectures by academics from other universities would be very interesting!
1)More communication.2) the lecturer should answer questions via ZOOM or Padlet.3)Use Powerpoint with keywords while speaking in the lectures.
besides de handout (that are really helpful) the professor could add slides Hard to know the difference between JUS/JUR-course. Not made clear what is expected from the two different level.
I think Bygrave sometimes could use easier words, or at least take some time to explain what he is talking about. It can sometimes be difficult to follow the lecture when there is no power-point on the wall. I also think it is challenging to connect the topics we talk about in the lectures to the learning requirements on the semester page.
More focus on GDPR. More updated literature.
No:)
Sometimes it's unclear where in the handout the lecturer is talking, and I fall of a little bit. This might just be me who don't have the strongest english, but it would be nice with some more "Over to point..."
speak slower, not everyone is native english speakers. Make ppt instead of handouts, its easier to follow a lecture if the lecturer speak while showing keywords
Would be nice to have a PP on all the lectures, because it makes it easier to pay attention
